

Health IT Ethics: Webinar looks at implications of growing importance of moral factors

Earlier today, TECHNATION Health hosted a webinar for members that looked at one of the most important topics in health IT: ethics. Kelly Davison, a CNA-certified psychiatric and mental health registered nurse who has worked with many of society's most marginalized and wonderful people along the care continuum in two provinces, provided participants with an interactive look at some of the primary ethical frameworks and paradigms that guide current healthcare practice. He also highlighted the growing importance of information and communications technologies as moral factors. He concluded with a discussion about the implications of these ethics and paradigms as overarching requirements for systems design.

The webinar presentation slides will be made available to members that were unable to attend. Please contact Janet Tite at jtite@technationcanada.ca if you would like to receive a copy.
